Not illustrated. 1919 Excerpt: .heat-treated nickel and chrome-nickel steels fail to give as much resistance to impact as carbon steel or even ingot iron. Summary Undoubtedly the occurrence of the notch effect in machines and engineering structures is much more common than is generally recognized. This is generally due to the design of the structure but may be caused by faulty workmanship. Even a hasty examination of such machines as locomotives, automobiles, stationaiy gas engines, steam engines, etc. reveals an amazingly large number of notches and in many such cases the material-composing the parts should have a high degree of notch toughness to insure against failure. The logical test for such materials and the only one capable of yielding reliable results is the notched-bar test. This test should supplement the usual tensile or hardness tests and its results used as an index of the resistance of the material to the notch effect. A factor of safety is generally used in the design of parts of machines requiring the material to have a certain strength combined with a certain amount of ductility. These properties are written into the specifications and the material is inspected on such a basis. Neither the factor of safety nor the usual properties offer a guarantee against failure in cases similar to those discussed here. It is for this reason that the cause of many failures remains a mystery when test bars taken from the broken parts are found to pass all specifications. The Charpy test would...
