The Legend of St. Bernard.
Canto 1. Bright were thy early days old feudal pile! When echoing through thy paved and fretted halls The tramp of mailed feet proclaimed thy state, And throng'd retainers filing from thy courts Mingled their war cries with the av'lanche roar Sent forth amid thy mountains; waxing bold And more determined gainst their fellow men, As nature, frowning from her unscal'd holds Defied the efforts of their puny power. And yet, proud keep! thou knewest not the gem Like diamond prisoned in its native mine Within thy ramparts pent, to waste its fire Till time should call it from its hidden cell About the
